

FALLEN LIFESAVERS

Memorial

A national memorial is planned for Coogee Beach in NSW to honour Australian lifesavers killed in armed conflicts while serving our country. The memorial will feature an iconic bronze statue designed by renowned sculptor Alan Somerville, terraced seating, landscaping and a wall of remembrance listing the names of the fallen lifesavers. FALLEN LIFESAVERS

Memorial

The National Memorial for Fallen Life Savers will be a place of remembrance and reflection, recognising the contributions of surf lifesavers in war, as a distinct group who rose from protecting beachgoers at home and went on to fight for Australia in wars throughout the world.

The Memorial will be at Coogee Beach in NSW on Goldstein Reserve along the south end of the promenade, near the Coogee Surf Life Saving Club. There will be a statue, terrace seating and remembrance wall listing the names of all Australian fallen lifesavers. The names are being researched by Surf Life Saving Australia historians and will be refined as information comes in from the community.

A Trust has been established to oversee the project and to monitor its development. The Trust consists of representatives of the three levels from government, the Surf Life Saving movement, the Australian Defence Force and the Returned and Services League of Australia (RSL).

Construction on the memorial is anticipated to commence in mid 2013.
